

Brad Powell's practice focuses on handling litigation matters, complex construction claims, contract disputes/interpretation, and resolution of bond, retainage, and lien claim situations for general contractors in the Pacific Northwest. With nearly 40 years of experience, Brad has established a reputation as a leading construction litigator handling legal matters for the general contractors that have shaped Seattle's skyline, built its infrastructure and constructed its roads and bridges. Clients come to him for his counsel on drafting and negotiating contracts or solving a contract dispute because they know he will guide them through a proven process designed to protect their interests and resolve issues and disputes earlier rather than later.

Through litigation, mediation, arbitration, and settlement, Brad has successfully resolved construction claims in state and federal courts, as well as before arbitration panels in the western United States, Texas, Florida, and Washington, D.C. He has negotiated numerous construction contracts, joint venture agreements, as well as architecture and engineering contracts and subcontracts.
